Excerpt: .change them, but surely God must understand and reward his devotion to what he believes to be right. So talking they came finally to the Han River, and took the boat which would land them--one at the University, where his education was drawing to its end; the other in Hankow, where the long planned-for revolution was to claim his service sooner than he knew. Two weeks later there was great excitement among the students on the Mission compound at Wuchang. Mr. Chu, a graduate of Boone University, who was acting as interpreter for the American Consul-General at Hankow, came across the river in haste with startling news. The revolutionary headquarters in the Russian Concession of the city had been discovered. No one knew the secret place, he said, until yesterday, when the accidental explosion of some powder which the revolutionists used to make bombs, gave it away. Mr. Sun Wu, being over hasty, and not careful enough, exploded his face. Instantly he went downstairs, his injured face covered under his long garment, and made his way to the Japanese hospital nearby. By that time the accident was reported through the Russian quarters, and the Consul went to the place, the Chinese Deputy going with him in the hope of arresting some revolutionists. They found only one old humpbacked man busily compounding charms out of the exploded powder. Afterwards they discovered that he had come back there, after his companions had run away, in order...
