Of course, after circumstances of wind and weather may necessitate a departure from the orders; but the naming of any day, step, or speed, will have given the captain a fair criterion by which he may judge of the urgency of his orders. 60. Example 2. It has been stated that if the presence of a steamer is required at a given place by a given day, this table will inform the admiral what day she should be started, in order to reach the port with the minimum expenditure of coal. The following Example is given as being slightly more complicated than the above. Example 2. Important despatches are expected to arrive at from England, by the mail packet, on the 10th of June, and the admiral intends to send a steamer to meet the packet,...
