Friday, July 22.--Temperature of water 67. At 11 A. M. we examined the shad in the pens, and finding them all diseased turned them loose. Saturday, July 23.--Temperature of water 66. We examined a box of eggs that we sunk in the Sound the 20th, and found those that were taken from the two females, about 1,000, looking the same as all eggs previously taken, when three days old. We took up the pound and pens to-day, turned loose the remaining shad, and closed our experiments. HENRY J. FENTON. It should be recollected that these experiments were conducted by men who were very confident that they would be successful, and every facility was afforded to them to make the test...
